What is achlorhydria?Achlorhydria occurs when there's an absence of hydrochloric (HCl) acids in the stomach. It's a more severe form of a hypochlorhydria, a deficiency of stomach acids. Both conditions can impair the digestive process and lead to damage of the gastrointestinal system. Without stomach acid, your body won't properly break down protein. You'll also be more susceptible to gastrointestinal infections. HCl acids break down our food and activate digestive enzymes that dissolve proteins and other nutrients. It also helps kill bacteria, viruses and parasites in the stomach, protecting you from infection and disease. Left untreated, achlorhydria and hypochlorhydria can have life-threatening consequences. Achlorhydria can occur in men and women of all races and ages. However, this condition occurs more frequently in the elderly community. There are a number of factors that can contribute to developing achlorhydria, including Hypothyroidism. This condition can significantly slow down your metabolism resulting in a decrease of gastric acid production.Medications. Antacids are a useful solution to heartburn and indigestion. Proton pump inhibitors (PPIs) can alleviate symptoms from gastroesophageal reflux disease (GERD). Both medications reduce acidity in the stomach. Overuse or complications can prevent the body from producing stomach acids at all, leading to achlorhydria.Surgery. Weight loss surgeries, such as the gastric bypass procedure, reduce the size of your stomach and alter how your body handles food. When the function of a significant portion of the stomach is changed, stomach acid production can decrease.H. pylori infection. Helicobacter pylori (H. pylori) infection is a condition that causes peptic ulcers. Left untreated, this infection can reduce the amount of stomach acid produced.Autoimmune disorders. Certain autoimmune disorders can affect stomach acid production.In order to diagnose achlorhydria, doctors will take note of your medical history and current symptoms. They may choose to test the pH of your stomach if you have a history of exhibiting the following symptoms:Stomach secretions should normally have a pH of around 1.5, which is highly acidic. However, premature infants and the elderly are both noted to have much less acid in their stomachs than that.If your doctor thinks you might have achlorhydria or hypochlorhydria, a specialist will help determine the best way to measure your stomach acid levels.Blood tests, such as a complete blood count (CBC), can also be used to check for certain types of anemia, which may be related to inadequate stomach acid levels.Treating achlorhydria depends on the cause of your condition. If you developed achlorhydria from an infection, such as H. pylori, doctors may prescribe antibiotics to treat the infection. If you were prescribed a PPI medication to alleviate acid reflux symptoms, your doctor may switch the prescription to avoid triggering achlorhydria. If you have a medical condition that's causing achlorhydria, you can work with your doctor to manage the condition and symptoms.Achlorhydria can lead to significant health problems and complications, so it and its causes should be treated as soon as possible. If you notice any digestive changes or bothersome symptoms, see a doctor to find the right treatment plan for you. Filter alphabetically: A B C D E F G H I J K L M N O P Q R S T U V W X Y Z
